It almost seems as if some people are born with a silver spoon in their mouth, while others are destined to suffer. Why is it that some people are born with amazing capacity, and others are created so simple? Why is there autism in the world? Why Down Syndrome? If in fact God is just, why not mete out talents and abilities in an equal manner to all people?

Using the backdrop of a famous event brought in the Talmud; this Shmuz focuses us on some of the big picture issues of life, helping us understand "life settings", as they apply to each person.

- Why are some people blessed with success and others not?
- Is there a reason for suffering in the world?
- What about pain?
- What about death?
